Excerpt: .Cincinnati, and the nature of the conflicting claims to the property of Lane Seminary near that city, and stated additional reasons, from the want of unanimity even in the Synod of Cincinnati itself , why that location of the new Seminary was entirely out of the question. As to Peoria, he knew nothing, but presumed the advocates of that place would, in due time, make its advantages known; but he believed the members of the Synod of Illinois were not unanimous in its favour---and surely the Assembly could not be expected to go behind their own wishes, in order to do them good. With respect to St. Louis, he should only go into some remarks of a general character. He took it For granted, wherever the Seminary might be placed, that large efforts might be expected in that locality to furnish funds, grounds, and means for the proposed Institution. Looking at this position from a distance, and in a large view, he could not believe it to be for the benefit either of the general cause of Christ, or the particular interests of Presbyterianism to withdraw so large a sum as fifty or one hundred thousand dollars from the local interests of the c-ause in Missouri, as must be done should the Seminary be located there; it , for the sake of what might be called a side cause, this should be done, the cause would be paralyzed for years to come. Again, should this...
